WEDNESDAY EVENING, AUGUST 24

The Earthquake in Italy. Down the steep road came old and young men, laden with such of their household goodas they had saved, chi. fly bedding. Their woobegone faces showed traces of a night spent in tears. Then came a little handeraft filled with dusty and tumbled clothes, from under which protraded a pair of booted feet, telling of the sad burden there hidden. Opposite ruiped houses were encamped their occupants, or in the otchards and gardens you saw improvised tents. On the road-ide was a bed made on the ground, and tented over with showle and other garments as warm'y as possible, for beneath lay sick persons. Groups of young airls wander d about weepin; but all the people were very quies, and as it sendoned, and only when some sad burden was earned past did their voices the in lamentable exclamations. Before we reached the piszz, we came upon a group of houses fallen io one heap of ruin across the street, so that we had to climb ever a hill of rubbish. Here the so ders were at work diggiog. Alse!

they could hope to find no living person und r these crusting masses of mesonly.

la the piazza two men sat on the derstep of their house, their arms folded on their knees, their heads beat down in dumb dispair, trrible to see. A woman, weeping, told me that the wife and mother by burned to the ruins of the house behind them. In the middle of the most destitute cases. A poor, regged woman, flushed with crying, was teling her had story, and a group of sileut and sympathizing listeners stood case around. The silence in the usually volumble Italians was very impressive. Soldiers wire being ordered off to parties to various points to excavate. Then two boards were carried past. On them were the flattened and dust covered forms of a woman and a little girl, just dug out. Three or four men passed me carrying and supporting to a chair an elderly women wish crushed and bound up fac :. She was speaking, and her bearers tenderly told her not to be afraid. This was about 3 o'clock in the afternoon. The caretqu ke had happened at exactly five misuses past one on the day before, as the great clock of Casamaccicls, which had stopped, proved. The poor woman had therefore tain basied alive twenty. six hours, with what agony of mind and body through the long dark night and followering morning one can happiy to reely imagine .-London News
